Detection of fragmented and microdeletion/duplication of chromosome 22q11.2 in a Chinese boy with attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder and his mother. To explore the role of chromosome 22q11.2 microdeletions and duplications in the pathogenesis of attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) in a Chinese family. A boy with ADHD had a normal karyotype and a normal copy number of chromosome 22 at diagnosis. Because his symptoms had not improved following treatment with methylphenidate (MPH), he was treated with an atomoxetine. Molecular techniques were used to detect 22q11.2 microdeletions and duplications. We analyzed the clinical features of the patient and the behavior of the parents in the family, and we detected chromosome 22q11.2 microdeletions and duplications. The boy's parents had ADHD, and his mother had a negative history for ADHD. Brain single photon emission computed tomography was performed to exclude vascular and metabolic abnormalities, and genetic tests were performed after informed consent was obtained from the parents. In the boy's father, a chromosome 22q11.2 microdeletion was detected. His mother and son both had an overlapping microdeletion of chromosome 22q11.2 (at locus D22S265). This was subsequently determined to be a partial microdeletion (~1.5 Mb) of chromosome 22q11.2. The boy had an overlapping microdeletion of chromosome 22q11.2 (at locus D22S265). His mother and son both had an overlapping microdeletion of chromosome 22q11.2 (at locus D22S265).
