The 6th Edition of Plant Physiology has been translated and published in.Properties of a thermostable di-tyrosine protein kinase from Thermotoga maritima. A tm-protein kinase (TM-PK) expressed in the hyperthermophilic bacterium Thermotoga maritima has been purified to homogeneity with a yield of about 0.6 mg protein per liter of culture. The procedure includes heat precipitation, heating, ammonium sulfate fractionation, and hydrophobic chromatography. The protein kinase has a Stokes radius of 5.5 +/- 0.2 nm and a quaternary structure that is altered during heat denaturation. It has a Mr of 56,000 +/- 3000 estimated from gel permeation chromatography. The elution profile of the native kinase on a Superose 12 column is bell-shaped with a Stokes radius of about 7 nm. The enzyme is inactivated at 100 degrees C and is readily reactivated upon mild heating. Kinetic properties at high enzyme concentrations suggest that the native enzyme is dimeric. TM-PK autophosphorylates in vitro with a Km of 230 microM and is able to phosphorylate an exogenous substrate with a Km of 15 microM. The tyrosine residue of TM-PK that is essential for the phosphorylation activity has been identified as the COOH-terminal residue of the polypeptide. Sensitivity and specificity of a three-question screening questionnaire for gastroenteritis in children at the community level. We aimed to estimate the sensitivity and specificity of a three-question questionnaire as a screening instrument for the diagnosis of gastroenteritis in young children at the community level. The children were enrolled in a longitudinal study on determinants of enteric infections among children of Bergen
