Libraries also hold a lot of hints towards the new user interface. These items, when added to your project actually create a new project file for the bookmarked items. Projects feature a “Find” (Ctrl+F) function with a fantastic search. Virtual Copies are also visible. You can place them on panels, allowing you to have all sorts of apps open at the same time. Another very important aspect of the interface are the smart previews. The preview panel can even tell you what files have been detected in a specific DNG card. The final feature that helps you grasp the idea of the new user interface is the Delegate option. You can create a button that creates a link to a specific photo you want to add to that project file. You use the Delegates to quickly add a photo to any project without having to navigate to the photo in question. Amazing for those who often lose track of photos during a project! What else does Lightroom 5 give us? We have Project templates. This can find a use when you have a certain workflow in mind, but want to reuse certain basic tasks. These templates can be found on the right of the Bridge panel. So there you go. Lightroom 5 is a nice update and if you haven't used it yet, it's definitely worth the upgrade. There are a lot of things to keep in mind however. One of those things is that Lightroom 5 is referred to by many as the “dark horse”. I am not sure what this means, but I assume that it refers to the lack of official support for this version of Lightroom. Despite this, Adobe still ships updates and new features whenever it feels the need.

The future of Photoshop and the future of how we work with images are here now. SEATTLE -- (BUSINESS WIRE)-- Today, Google (Google GOOG), the owners of the world's largest mapping service, delivered Adobe (Nasdaq:ADBE) Creative Cloud Maps to millions of people. With the latest Google Maps technology, Adobe users can view their maps as a single canvas, with zoom, tilt and heading control using a tablet or phone. In addition to editing line art to make high-quality, custom maps, Adobe users can now also manage their maps on a desktop through the Creative Cloud app, as well as transfer content to other mobile platforms with the new Adobe CC Containers app. For the first time, people can create, manage and easily publish to their own mobile websites from the app. "Maps shape the way we navigate our daily lives," said Ricky Kugler, VP Business Development at Google. "Custom maps can help us make sense of unfamiliar places - helping stores find customers, for example, or magazines and artists surface new stories. At Google, we wanted to make maps accessible to anyone, enabling anyone to create, manage and distribute maps using their favorite mobile apps. "With this new version of Maps on the web, Adobe Creative Cloud Maps users can enjoy a variety of features that were previously only available on Android and iOS. The new site makes it easy for users to start creating, managing and sharing their maps locally with additional tools and integration with other apps. As the map location data and location-based services become more important to our lives, people will need easy access to the tools to make the most of that data. Our goal is to make that access intuitive and easy so everyone can benefit from what maps can do."

As a 3D artist, I couldn't wait for a native PhotoFilter yet that supports curves-based image rendering and, at the same time, include editing features for exposure levels and other image adjustments. You now can either render image as curves object while editing in Photoshop, or you can use the new MultiViews for rendering. I'll demonstrate in this lab how to work with dynamic curves to adjust the exposure in Photoshop by tweaking the original image rendered as curves object in Photoshop: Click the Curves palette to enable the selected curve tool. Either by using the hot keys or tap on the Curves palette icon, the Curves panel will appear as a floating sub-window on top of the document window. What if you want to apply more of exposure changes, for example, like bringing down the top of the image? You can either use the Adjust Exposure button again with the Curves tool or navigate to the Adjust Exposure sub-window, and then use the Window menu to choose the Curves tab to access the curves sub-window.
