SDK.TnPPGT (PpGT-N) is a prodrug of the putative endogenous antibiotic PpGT-N. PpGT-N was discovered as a novel immunosuppressive antibiotic, but its biological function is still unknown. We established a cell culture system for PpGT-N production and investigated its in vitro and in vivo toxicity. We also developed a prodrug of PpGT-N, and named it TnPPGT. The antitumor activity of TnPPGT was examined by the s.c. injection of Ehrlich ascites tumor cells. Toxicity was evaluated by the measurement of blood cell count, measurement of biochemical markers, histopathological examination of liver and kidney tissues, and whole-body imaging of sodium-22. PpGT-N was produced in cell cultures, and TnPPGT (PpGT-N prodrug) exerted stronger antitumor activity than PpGT-N in vivo. PpGT-N exhibited low in vitro cytotoxicity but was highly toxic in vivo, possibly due to rapid metabolism. On the other hand, TnPPGT showed low cytotoxicity and enhanced antitumor activity. Therefore, Pp
